The purpose of this study was to describe the diagnostic accuracy of radiographic methods used to evaluate the patellofemoral joint (PJ) in patients with unilateral patella alta (PA). Preoperative radiographs of 136 knees in 132 patients with surgically treated PA were included. In the radiographic evaluation of the PJ, an assessment of trochlear dysplasia (TD), patellar thickness (PT), patellar tilt (PTL), lateralized patella (LP), and lateral femoral facet deformity (LFD) was performed. The diagnostic accuracy of these radiographic parameters was assessed by means of receiver operating characteristic analysis. On the basis of current clinical and radiological standards, 66 of 136 hips had a patellofemoral (PF) syndrome and 17 of 136 had a trochlear dysplasia. The area under the curve (AUC) of the LFD, the TPT,
